THE archives of an ecclesiastical institution, such as a University or a Cathedral Church, are essentially of two kinds: grants and confirmations of privileges from the Crown, the Pope, or the Bishop, and title-deeds of property. Such form the nucleus of our collection here in Oxford. As soon as the University acquired jurisdiction and powers of administration and of conferring rights on its members, other records came into existence, which are grouped together under the name of Registers, a name which in Oxford, as elsewhere, was applied in a loose and wide sense. The oldest of these are books of Statutes and Ordinances regulating the studies and the discipline of the scholars and the assemblies of the masters: we have them from the reign of King Edward III. Gradually they come to include the admissions of masters to Convocation and of bachelors to lecture (ad legendum); but it is a long time before we get anything like a complete record of graduations. When the distinct Registers of Congregation (that is of the assembly of masters possessing a special and limited qualification) begin in the sixteenth century, they contain what ought to be, but is not always, such a complete record. The Registers of the Convocation of masters regent and non-regent, the highest assembly of the University, are not found until a still later date, though some records of their proceedings are occasionally inserted in the Registers of Congregation. As for the undergraduates, it does not appear to have been thought necessary for the University sity to enter their admissions until the reign of Queen Elizabeth, from which time we possess practically complete Registers of Matriculations. When subscription to the Act of Uniformity was required, a second set of these Registers came into existence, the Registers of Subscriptions, which have the peculiar interest of preserving the autograph signatures of all members of the University at their first admission. The duty of subscription at matriculation was abolished by Act of Parliament in 1854,¹ but undergraduates continued to enter their names themselves in a Register until the end of 1891.²

Besides the Registers there are here, as in other institutions, books of Privileges and Chartularies into which the charters and title-deeds are transcribed. Of the old Letter Books, which are for the most part strictly Formularies, only one remains in the Archives: two others have passed to the Bodleian and the Cottonian Libraries. But these do not come properly under the definition of archives. Still less can we include a large series of transcripts and collectanea which were made by many antiquaries in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries, although for historical purposes they are more constantly consulted than any other volumes in my custody. Among them may be specially mentioned the collections of Mr. Robert Hare, who was Clerk of the Pells in the time of Queen Elizabeth, and of the first two Keepers of the Archives, Mr. Brian Twyne and Dr. Gerard Langbaine, in the reign of King Charles I and during the Interregnum. Nor need I here speak of the vast accumulation of miscellaneous papers,

² Since that date the only record of undergraduates' signatures is preserved in the Fee Books in the charge of the Curators of the University Chest, notes, accounts, private letters, fragmentary draughts, and other rubbish, which is due to the fatal inability of Keepers to destroy things when they are done with and to refuse to accept papers which do not concern them. Until 1909 indeed they were without excuse, for the statute limited their custody to the muniments and records which I first mentioned. But in that year the scientific definition of the Archives was superseded by a loose statement about 'all documents which are already included in the Archives or which may be committed to' the Keeper's 'charge by any officer of the University in pursuance of any statutable duty or power.'¹ The Keeper therefore has now no discretion in the matter.

There is one thing which you will not find in the Archives, and which never was there, though the University Statutes to this day expressly assert that it is there: that is, a set of patterns of University costume. The statute, tit. xiv. § 3, prescribes that doctors, masters and bachelors shall 'wear the gowns belonging to their degree as at present used, according to the pattern laid up in the Archives'. This was a mere blunder of the people who revised the statute in 1856. It took the place of a statute passed on 13 July 1770, which provided that, in order to prevent innovations in costume, the Vice-Chancellor and Proctors should cause a pattern of every sort of academical dress to be engraved on copper and deposited in a press assigned for the purpose.² It was therefore not a set of models of gowns but of copperplates which were to be preserved, and moreover the press in which the engravings were to be kept was not in the Archives but in the Convocation House.¹ This is not the only example of the way in which statutes have been amended by persons who did not take the trouble of understanding the statutes which they were revising.

II

The place where the University archives were first deposited is unknown, but it may be taken as nearly certain that it was the Church of St. Mary the Virgin, in which the assemblies and public acts were held. When the scholars departed to Northampton and the studium was suspended in 1264,² they may have carried away the archives with them, but these must at that time have been easily portable and could probably have been packed into a single hutch or chest. We have no exciting story to tell like that which happened to the Pope's archives in the fourteenth century. When the seat of the Papacy was removed to France and then established at Avignon, the 'treasure', which included the registers and other records, was stored at Perugia. Clement V ordered that part of it should be placed for safety in the Church of St. Francis at Assisi and that the rest should be sent to him at Avignon. The carriage of this second portion required sixty packhorses, but it got no further than Lucca, where in 1314 it was completely looted by a band of Ghibellines from Pisa. In 1319 Assisi too was taken by storm and the treasure plundered, and when the Guelphs recaptured the town in 1322 there was little treasure left there.¹ Our muniments have not been subjected to any such depredations. There never has been a removal of the University since 1264: it was only a party that migrated to Stamford in 1334. Since then Oxford has stood more than one siege, but its archives have never been pillaged.

As soon as we have record of the place where they were kept, in the fourteenth century, we find them stored in the old Congregation House, which was built about 1320 in the churchyard of St. Mary the Virgin and could be entered from the Church by way of the Chapel of St. Catherine on the east side of the north transept. Until the vestry was made in the fifteenth century there was also access to the Congregation House by means of a lane between it and the chancel of the Church approached from Cat Street. In that house there were a number of chests² containing money which members of the University could borrow upon security, and also the security for such loans in the shape of volumes of books and miscellaneous articles of value.³ In some of these chests there were schedules

² Seventeen are enumerated in a list apparently drawn up shortly before the middle of the fourteenth century: Munimenta Academica, ed. H. Anstey, 1868, p. 496.

³ Bonds for repayment were sometimes given. In the West Press of the Archives, β. 16, is a bond of John Hoode, M.A., 22 November 17 Henry VIII (1525), for £10 borrowed from the Wynton chest, which was to be repaid at the rate of £2 a year. An endorsement written by Mr. William Smith, Fellow of University College, in March 1703/4 states that £3 were still owing in 1545; and these £3 are entered as arrears in the Vice-Chancellor's Accounts as late as 1613 (in the Archives β. 21, p. 170).

of accounts and even registers.¹ But the special chest to which one would turn would be the Chest of the Four Keys. In this there were deposited 'the rolls containing all the goods² of the University, as well moneys due to it as other things, such as books and transcripts,³ and accounts of the chests, and muniments and deeds; and likewise deeds if they are indentured (duplicatae) and accounts wherewith the Proctors are charged at the termination of their year'.⁴ The Proctors kept two of the keys; the other two were in the custody of two regent masters from the two nations.⁵ This chest appears to be the 'new chest' for which provision was made by an ordinance of 1347.⁶ The Proctors also had a chest of their own, which contained a copy of the library catalogue,⁷ as well as some royal and other charters.⁸ It is possible that this chest is that also described as the 'chest of documents' (cista exemplario-

² The modern term would be 'assets'.

³ Mr. Anstey, influenced probably by recollection of a later statute (see above, p. 5), renders exemplaria 'patterns of academical dress'.

⁴ Munimenta acad., p. 152; cf. p. 490, where the statute regulating the Proctors' duty in this respect would appear to be earlier than 1347, because it only mentions one chest of records.

⁵ In the seventeenth century the Proctors had the keys of the two upper locks, and the Vice-Chancellor those of the two lower: Twyne, Collect. i. 274 in the Archives (also in Dr. Andrew Clark's edition of Wood's Life, iv, 1895, 123 f.). But probably the chest had been renewed by that time.

rum),¹ which contained the bonds (cautiones) handed to the Proctors by appellants ;² but this may have been a different chest. A list of all the University muniments was ordered to be drawn up in duplicate ; and one copy kept in the Chest of the Four Keys, the other in that of the Proctors.³ We are not here concerned with the register and documents belonging to the Chancellor,⁴ or with the statute books of the Chancellor and Proctors,⁵ because these were in the personal custody of those officers and were not kept among the archives.

In process of time the Chest of the Four Keys became overcrowded ; when a search was made in it in 1449 for a particular deed, it was found to be full of 'a multitude of rolls, bonds of no value, and other things which were not worth registering', and the particular document required could not be discovered. Consequently a body of eight doctors and regent masters were appointed by Convocation to act with the Chancellor and the keepers of the chest, in 'reforming' it by keeping any muniments which were of use and removing such as were worthless.⁶ It is to be regretted that the delegacy has not been many times reappointed since.

It is probable that this chest had for a long while become obsolete for practical purposes, and in the middle ages no one thought of documents as possessing an historical or antiquarian interest. So in 1412 a new chest had been established with five keys. The additional key was entrusted to the Chancellor, and it was provided that the two representatives of the nations should be heads of Colleges.¹ In this chest was to be deposited a copy of every statute passed by the University.² In course of time it received in 1439 a catalogue of Duke Humphrey's library.³

In 1427 another chest was ordered with five keys, to be kept by the Chancellor and four representatives of the nations; of these two were to be regent masters and two non-regent members of Colleges. This was evidently a different chest from that which I mentioned before, because the Proctors were not given keys of this one, and had they been deprived of keys which they already held no doubt we should have heard of it. This new chest of 1427 was reserved for money and jewels,⁴ but a great part of its contents was robbed some time before 17 December 1545,⁵ on which day Convocation ordered what remained to be put back in the Chest of the Five Keys: the chest was to be repaired⁶ and deposited in the house of the treasurer of University College,⁷ and the keys entrusted to the Vice-Chancellor and the heads of Magdalen, New, Corpus Christi, and All Souls' Colleges.

A month later, on 18 January 1546, Convocation decreed 'that the chests in the lower house below the Congregation House and all the books lying there as pledges, or other books found in the said house should be sold' according to the judgement of five persons appointed for the purpose.¹ But the Chest of the Five Keys remained, and under the Laudian statutes it was kept in Corpus Christi College, and the five keys were in the charge of five heads of Colleges, three of them the same as the former keepers and two different.² This statute was not abrogated until 13 May 1861.³ The wholesale destruction ordered in January 1546 must have applied only to the chests from which loans were made. It cannot have been intended to affect the two chests of four and five keys in which the muniments were preserved. These indeed no doubt suffered some loss, as few things were left sacred in that age of spoliation; but the collection was not sold at the discretion of the five delegates.

Early in the seventeenth century the University became anxious about the safekeeping of its charters. On 21 October 1609 the Vice-Chancellor declared in Convocation that 'he thought it most necessary that the charters which we still possess should be kept, together with the greater seal of the University, in a safer and stronger place, lest hereafter we have none at all remaining'.⁴ A delegacy of thirty persons was appointed to confer with the Vice-Chancellor on this and some other matters, and on the 24th they decided that, subject to the pleasure of the Warden and Fellows, the archives should be stored in the vestry of All Souls' College Chapel. A press was to be constructed to hold them; the Vice-Chancellor and Proctors were to be given keys of it; and the Vice-Chancellor and the Warden of the College were to have keys of the door of the vestry.¹ It is an illustration of the excellent manner in which the business of the University was carried on in those days that the decree which originated with a delegacy appointed on 21 October was passed on the 27th. There is, however, no evidence that any steps were taken for the deposit of the archives in All Souls' Chapel, and it may be conjectured that the College was unwilling to accept the arrangement.

III

The removal of the archives from the Congregation House to the chamber in the Tower of the Schools, where they are still kept, was an indirect result of the work of Thomas Bodley, who left a mark on the material splendour of Oxford only second to the stamp of learning which he impressed upon her by the foundation of his Library. When, in his own words, 'I concluded at the last to set up my staffe at the Librarie-dore in Oxon,'¹ he did more than establish the only library of the first rank in Europe outside the Vatican: he made it possible to continue the plan begun in the Divinity School so as to make provision for all academic lectures and exercises on a scale unequalled in any university before the last fifty years. He found an empty library above the Divinity School, and he filled it with books. Then, in 1610, he wrote to the university asking permission to enlarge and extend the building (ut fines et limites bibliothecae suae publicae et communis amplificet et adaugeat), and on 12 June Convocation appointed a delegacy of twenty-four persons to give effect to his wish.² So soon as 16 (or perhaps 19) July³ the foundation stone of

³ John Bell, esquire bedel of arts and medicine, tells us that 'On the xvjth of July 1610 doctor King deane of Christchurch being then vicechancelloure with the doctours proctors and heads of houses and diuers other masters went to the diuinitie scoole where the vicechancelour with diuers other doctors layd the first foundation stone and then they had wine and Kakes and bestowed liberally to incourage the ouerseers and woorkmen to goe forward with their worke':

Reg. Al. (unpaged) in the Archives. Twyne records the event on the 19th. 'July 19^o the same yere the first stone of this buildinge, in one of the north angles thereof was layed, with great solennitie, about 10. of the clocke in the forenoone: the foundation was of a very great depth': Collect. vi. fo. 112 b. As for the date Wood first gave the 19th and then corrected it into the 16th: see Dr. Clark's note to Wood's Life, iv. 139, n. 3. He is followed by Dr. Macray, Annals, p. 37. I do not know on what ground the 16th is said to be a mistake in Pietas Oxoniensis, 1902, p. 12, n. 3. Twyne gives the 19th again in Collect. xxi. p. 285.

the Proscholium under the East Wing (or Arts End) of the library was laid.

Anthony Wood relates that 'the Sages of the University now considered among themselves that the adding of three more sides to that would make a compleat quadrangular pile; yet how to bring their minds to pass they knew no other way . . . than to obtain contributions from those persons that had been formerly of the University. While things thus stood, Sir Thomas Bodley, who had received notice of their design, forthwith sent a Letter to the University dated Nov. 5, 1611; wherein among several matters he imparteth the same motion to them, that is to say, of pulling down the old Schools of Arts, and the adding to that work which he had began, three more sides as is before mentioned.'¹ This statement is inexact. There is no evidence that the University then contemplated building a quadrangle, nor is a quadrangle mentioned in Bodley's letter of 5 November 1611. In that letter he says that

'where it hath bene longe desired by the Universitie and as every man knowes uppon urgent necessitie, that God would raise them up an instrument by whose Credit and care they might be provided of better built scholes, for their publicke professions then those ruinous little roomes, with which their turnes at this present are with much inconvenience and undecencie served.'²

He had conversed with Sir John Bennet, who promised to collect money and 'take upon him to see the building it selfe to be duly performed', and they had spoken

¹ History and Antiquities of the University of Oxford, ed. J. Gutch, 1796, ii. 787.

² Reg. K. fo. 76. The statement in Pietas Oxoniensis, 1902, p. 13, that Bodley then 'undertook, should two storeys be erected, to carry a third all round the three sides for future use by the Library' seems to be an anticipation of the proposal in his will.

'about the number of scholes that are to be erected, about the place and formes to be observed in the building, and a great many more particulars, apparently incident to a work of that moment.'¹

The following year was occupied in the work of collecting subscriptions and in buying up the houses on the site for the proposed building.² On 18 April 1612 Convocation appointed a delegacy of twenty persons to confer with the Vice-Chancellor and Proctors on matters connected with the building of the schools (de quibusdam propositis ad structuram scholarum admodum necessariis), which were to be explained by Sir John Bennet, and the report of the delegacy was received and approved on 2 May.³ In the course of this year the design for a quadrangle must have been decided upon: it may have originated in the consultation between Sir Thomas Bodley and Sir John Bennet; but evidence is lacking. In his will dated 2 January 1612/13 the whole plan is clearly set forth:

'I doe appoint and my will is, that yf the entended presente plott for building the newe scholes shall proceede in such sorte as the same is alreddie devised by publique consent, then over the toppes of those two Stories which are resolved to bee the height of the Schooles there shalbee contrived another third Rome, in case it may be performed with good conveniency and with the Universities approbation, to goe in compasse round aboute the Schooles and to meete at each end in twooe Lobies or passages framed with some speciall comlines of workemanshippe to make a faire entrance into the north and South Corners of my late new

Bodley did not live four weeks after this. He died on 28 January 1613, and was buried in Merton College Chapel on 29 March: on the following day the foundation stone of the new schools was laid at the north-west end.² We learn the name of the man who was most active in managing the business about the Library and the Schools, when we find that on 7 October the degree of D.C.L. was conferred upon Mr. John Hawley, Principal of Gloucester Hall, in recognition of the services he had performed for seventeen years as a counsellor to the Vice-Chancellor and of the great care and labour which he had bestowed on the new building works (summas curas et maximos labores in Bibliotheca Bodleiana et scholis publicis aedificando impendendo).³

On 11 February 1614/15 the Vice-Chancellor laid before Convocation the heavy expenses which had been incurred on the fabric of the new Schools by Sir John Bennet (who had in fact, as Dr. Langbaine notes in the margin of the Register, employed the money in part for his private advantage); a new table of fees on graduation was drawn up and approved,⁴ and later on in the year the fees on matriculation were also raised.⁵

Meanwhile, large contributions for the building came in. Wood gives a list of donations, which does not profess to be complete, amounting to £1,825 8s. 8d.; the total sum expended was, he says, about £4,500.¹

By 1615 the building had risen to the third story, for £22 were expended 'for two great windowes in the Tower':² these are the windows on either side of the place where Lord Pembroke's statue now stands. In five years the building was completed.³ There is still preserved in the Archives a bill of Slatford the smith for work done since 3 June 1618, and the work is of a nature which implies that the builders had nearly finished.⁴ The date of that year may still be seen on

There is no evidence that the Tower was designed for the purpose of storing the archives, but the analogy of several colleges, for instance, New, Lincoln, and Magdalen, suggests that it was so designed. It was, however, for a time made use of by delegacies of estates,² and by a delegacy appointed to prepare a statute de Collectoribus;³ and this practice went on at least until 1638. 17 July 1629¹ to revise and codify the University Statutes, Wood says that it sat 'in the Chamber of the School-Tower (now the place where the muniments were)'.² The heaviest part of the work fell upon Dr. Richard Zouch, Principal of St. Alban Hall, and Mr. Brian Twyne, formerly Fellow of Corpus Christi College; and if Dr. Zouch was responsible for the legal form of the body of Statutes under which the University was governed until 1854, there is no doubt that to Mr. Twyne, the most laborious of antiquaries, is due the collection of the materials.

It seems evident that the special reason why their meetings were held in the Tower was because the Registers and the old Statute Books of the University, out of which the new code was compiled, were already placed there. The North-East and the South-East Presses seem to belong to this date. The former of them still retains the original lock and key; in the other the lock has been changed, but what I have no doubt is the original key is still preserved: both are beautiful specimens of the kidney-bowed pattern.³

When the work of compilation was finished, 'in the meeting of all the Delegates and Heads of Houses every Monday in the Chamber of the School Tower,' Mr. Twyne read the revised statutes aloud, and each one was separately voted.⁴ The code was completed in 1633, on 1 September of which year it was ordered to be sent to the Chancellor.¹ In the following year, on 11 August, a statute was drawn up providing for the appointment of a public Keeper of the Archives. The Vice-Chancellor intimated that Mr. Twyne was the appropriate person to hold the office, and forthwith Mr. Twyne was unanimously elected.²

At this time only a few of the charters, deeds, and rolls had been removed into the Tower.³ When the present Congregation House was opened at the beginning of Michaelmas Term, 1638⁴, the rest were left derelict in the ancient building. In 1640, Mr. Twyne tells us that there was 'an intent to remove the Recordes from the old Congregation house at S^t Maries (as a place now deserted by the Universitie for such uses) into the Tower chamber as it was agreed upon in conventu praelectorum'; and on 28 November he, with the Vice-Chancellor and Proctors, 'went up to the Tower chamber to veiwe the place for the reducinge of all the Recordes together in that place . . . And then', he says, 'we ascended up to the upper chamber in the Tower, then full of loose bookes for the library, which chamber the Vicechancellor then and there resolved should be the

¹ The date of the letter to the Chancellor is 1 September (Reg. R. fo. 69), and it would appear that the Convocation which sent it was held on that day. Wood (ii. 382) makes it 20 August, which is in fact the last preceding date entered in the Register; but it is likely that another date should have been recorded on fo. 67 b.

I found the sheet among unsorted waste papers. There is a copy of it in Collect. Twyne et Langbaine, ii. 71, in the Archives, but the crosses are not there inserted. place for the presses to be made, for the keepinge of all the universitie Recordes in one place.'¹

Mr. Twyne's memorandum ends abruptly. But it is certain that the upper room was never used for the Archives. It contains, indeed, a press which was made near the end of King James I's reign, for the purpose of keeping the Registers of the Chancellor's Court.² But the room in 1642 was a storehouse for 'powder and shott'.³ Under Charles II, Wood says, it 'doth serve for Astronomical uses', evidently for the Savilian Professor, who had his mathematical library and school on the first floor,⁴ approached by the same staircase. It is possible that the press contained his instruments. But the upper room was not assigned to the Keeper of the Archives until 19 June 1854, at which time it was described 'heretofore used by the reader in experimental philosophy'.⁵

To return to the muniments, before he was Keeper, Mr. Twyne drew up a list of them as they were in the old Congregation House at the beginning of 1631,¹ and of this two transcripts were made. All these are still in my charge, and I have had a copy made for the purpose of collation with the collection as it is now arranged.² It is certain that Mr. Twyne removed a large part of the documents to the Tower, but had not completed the task when he died in July 1644. His successor, Mr. Gerard Langbaine, who was elected Provost of Queen's College and proceeded D.D. in 1646, tells us that 'from the latter end of October 1643 till the surrender of Oxford June the 24th 1646, this place being a Garrison of the King's, the old Congregation House was employed to lay match³ in'.⁴ It was therefore impossible to do any work there. When the surrender took place the key was handed to Mr. Crosse, the esquire bedel of law⁵; so that the records may be presumed to have been undisturbed. The archives in pertory, which I found among waste papers, is marked on the outside In Abaco Domus Congregationis pixide B., and 'xj April. 1635' is written in the margin of the first page. It has now been bound.

the Tower were also saved from pillage. Oxford never witnessed such a scene of destruction as is described by one who was present at the sack of Peterborough Minster in July 1643. There, we read, the soldiers ‘broke open the Chapterhouse, ransack’d the Records, broke the Seals, tore the Writings in pieces, specially such as had great Seals annexed unto them, which they took or mistook rather for the Popes Bulls. So that a grave and sober Person coming into the Room at that time, finds the Floor all strewed and covered over, with torn Papers, Parchments, and broken Seals; and being astonisht at this sight, does thus expostulate with them; Gentlemen (says He) what are ye doing? They answer, We are pulling and tearing the Popes Bulls in pieces. He replies, ye are much mistaken: for these writings are neither the Popes Bulls, nor anything relating to him. But they are the Evidences of several mens Estates, and in destroying these, you will destroy and undo many. With this they were something perswaded, and prevailed upon by the same person, to permit him to carry away all that were left undefaced, by which means, the writings the Church hath now, came to be preserved.’¹

What happened at Oxford was very different. John Aubrey tells us what he had heard from an eyewitness:

‘When Oxford was surrendered (24^o Junii 1646) the first thing generall Fairfax did was to sett a good guard of soldiers to preserve the Bodleian Library. . . . He was a lover of learning, and had he not taken this speciall care, that noble library had been utterly destroyed—quod N.B.; for there were ignorant senators enough who would have been contented to have it had so.’² supplement, p. 337.

The guard over the Bodleian Library saved the Archives.

² Brief Lives, ed. by A. Clark, 1893, i. 250 f.

As for the documents remaining in the Old Congregation House Dr. Langbaine could not get access to them until September 1647, and then, he says, 'I discovered that several panes, in the presse of Evidences where the Universityes Records lay, had been broken, and was affrayd that many of them might be imbesild.' But when in February 1648/9 he took 'a particular survey of all the severall boxes and writeings in each box', he found only four documents missing: one was a copy of which we possess the original; the second, an expired lease¹; the third, a document of which Twyne had already made a transcript; but the fourth unfortunately a document for which we would give a good deal—

K. 2.—*vetus quoddam inventarium de bonis Thomae de Hamme, bibliopolae et stationarii (ut videtur) anno Domini 1353.*²

The damage was evidently very small, and there is no proof that it was done subsequently to the surrender of the city. Indeed it may rather be inferred that the injury to the panels of the chest was caused when the room was used for ordnance purposes, and that these four documents fell out and were lost. Had there been any intention of plunder, more than four documents, and documents of more obvious value, would have gone.

Probably soon after he made his 'particular survey' Dr. Langbaine completed the work which Mr. Twyne had begun of removing the documents to the Tower. The press in which they are kept to this day had been prepared in Mr. Twyne's time, and although the locks have been changed, one can still see the original arrangement which he describes as follows:

² Note in Twyne, Collect. i. 278 (below, p. 31); also printed by Dr. Clark, Wood's Life, iv. 123.

‘The Abacus or presse in the west side of Camera turris Scholarum; the two uppermost locks the Vice-Chancellor’s key serving to both lockes: this key hangeth with the middle key of the mathematicall chest. The two lowermost locks the Proctors’ keyes; the Senior Proctor’s on the right hand and it hangeth on a loope in the great bunch, marked X; the Junior’s on the left hand—the Junior Proctor’s key hath a small peice of parchment tied to the bowe thereof, it is in a bunch of five keyes tied together.’¹

The first two Keepers of the Archives were distinguished antiquaries to whose labours all students of the history of the University are under an infinite debt. I have no wish in the least to disparage the honest industry of Anthony Wood; but it may be said with confidence that without the materials furnished by Mr. Twyne he could never have produced his histories of the University and City. Dr. Langbaine’s performances were on a smaller scale; but had not Mr. Twyne been so incomparable in his laboriousness, we should have ranked Dr. Langbaine even higher than we do for his zeal and activity in carrying on the work of his predecessor. He deserves special credit for his care in preserving the Archives intact at a time of serious political disturbance, and he did a great deal in arranging and binding up scattered papers and in making lists of them.²

On his death on 10 February 1657/8 Dr. Langbaine was succeeded by a man of European eminence, Dr. John Wallis, one of the founders of the Royal Society and reputed the greatest English mathematician before Newton. A Cambridge man, he had been made Savilian Professor of Geometry in 1649, and he retained the fame which he had deserved during the Interregnum after the Restoration and until the reign of Queen Anne, when he died in his eighty-seventh year. His prodigious powers of memory enabled him to read documents in cipher at ease, and the keys which he wrote out are still in use for deciphering the secret documents of his time. He left his mark on the Archives in numerous transcripts, but above all by the Repertory of the entire collection which he made on the basis of Mr. Twyne's list in 1664 and which continues to this day the standard catalogue. Curiously enough the autograph of this was long lost, and was only rediscovered by Dr. Ingram in 1815 'among heaps of loose papers and rubbish'.¹ The catalogue in use in the Archives is an admirably written contemporary copy.

Between 1703 and 1826 the University elected eight Keepers of the Archives, of whom two in particular left their mark on the collections under their charge. These were Dr. Benjamin Buckler, Fellow of All Souls', and Dr. James Ingram, afterwards President of Trinity, elected respectively in 1777 and 1815. Neither of them held office more than three or four years, but they both made a systematic verification of the Archives, and Dr. Buckler compiled an Index to them which is still the only index to the documents accumulated down to his time. Meanwhile in the eighteenth century the growth of the collections led to the need of more presses. The West Press had wings made to it; so that the original press is now marked β , and the wings α and γ : and an additional press was placed on the south wall of the room by Dr. Bernard Gardiner, Warden of All Souls', who was Keeper from 1703 to 1726. Later on, in 1815, a change was made in the stairs by which admission is gained to the room, and this press had to be shifted to the opposite side, so that the South Press became the North Press. There seem to have been also one or more tables with drawers, or chests of drawers, the contents of which have been at different times distributed among the new receptacles. Cupboards were also made under two of the windows which were used for miscellaneous litter. Some of this even now has not been completely sorted.

I have already spoken of the inconvenience caused by the reception of incongruous papers into the Archives. This inconvenience was greatly increased by the multifarious versatility of Dr. Philip Bliss, who was Keeper from 1826 to 1857. It was these thirty-one years which introduced the greatest and most far-reaching disorder in the collection. During the preceding period of nearly two centuries the Keepers did their duty and kept the Archives. They also supplied a Catalogue and an Index to which additions were made from time to time. Dr. Bliss was not contented with these modest functions. He was a first-rate antiquary, and he was the encyclopaedia of University information in his time, a man on all hands respected and beloved. But unfortunately during nearly the whole period of his Keepership he was also Registrar of the University (1824-1853), he was Registrar of the Chancellor's Court from 1831 to 1855, and he was one of the Clerks of the Market. Finally he was Principal of St. Mary Hall from 1848 until his death on 18 November 1857. He looked upon the Archives as the place of deposit of all the papers which came to him in any of his quintuple capacities, and he had a constitutional aversion to throwing away even the most trifling paper that reached his hands. More than this, he was a collector of miscellaneous biographical and bibliographical materials, and he used the Schools Tower as the storehouse of all manner of private accumulations, notes of his own, newspaper cuttings, curiosities of all sorts, not to speak of manifold notebooks begun but never continued. These accretions remain among the Archives, and his successors have shrunk before the task of weeding them.

An additional element of disorder was introduced when St. Mary's Church was refitted in 1827. Until that date the files of the Chancellor's Court had been preserved there—doubtless in the Lady Chapel, commonly known as Adam de Brome's Chapel;—but in the summer of 1827 the whole accumulation of monitions, declarations, affidavits, bonds, and exhibits of all sorts, going back to the reign of Queen Elizabeth, was removed into the Archives. They were probably deposited in the wings of the West Press, the present contents of which appear to have mostly been placed there after Dr. Bliss's time. Then the Upper Room of the Tower, the Hyperöon, as has been said,¹ was assigned to the Keeper of the Archives in 1854, and at some later date the Court papers were transferred into it. But they were never statutably in the Keeper's charge, his duties, so far as regards the Chancellor's Court, being limited to the custody of books and registers when completed.² Still, locally, they have been in the Archives since 1827, and I have thought it well that they should be put in order.

recent as 1897: Stat. tit. xxi.

² This statute indeed is so § 4. 2.

This work of arrangement has been carried out during the last two years (between 9 June 1910 and 26 April 1912) by the skill and energy of Mr. J. E. W. Wallis, B.A., of Brasenose College, now assistant master at Christ's Hospital, aided by a grant which I owe to the liberality of my own College. He has kindly drawn up a list both of these papers and of the Registers, to which he has been able to add a supplementary volume,¹ and henceforth there will be no difficulty in obtaining access to the records of any given year or term.

Dr. Bliss's two successors deserve to be commemorated with respect. The first, Dr. John Griffiths, for some time Warden of Wadham College, prepared the first critical edition of the Laudian Statutes, which was published after his death by Dr. Shadwell, now Provost of Oriel College; and his care for the Archives is attested by numerous notes which are found among them. The second, Mr. Thomas Vere Bayne, made about 1886 the first systematic verification of the entire collection which had been attempted since 1777, and the accuracy of his examination satisfies the severest tests. He also followed the example of Dr. Buckler by compiling an Index of all accessions since his time. That Index is now bound up, and I have hopes of incorporating Dr. Buckler's Index in it. During Mr. Vere Bayne's Keepership an invaluable service to the Archives was done by Dr. Andrew Clark, Fellow of Lincoln College, who, in connexion with his massive editions of Anthony Wood, drew up a conspectus of the contents of the Archives. This inventory, which is included in the fourth volume of Wood's Life, is the only printed guide to the collection.

APPENDIX I

INVENTORY OF MUNIMENTS IN THE CONGREGATION HOUSE

THE following inventory of the Archives as they were before their removal from the old Congregation House is printed from the first volume of Mr. Twyne's Collectanea preserved in the North-East Press of the Archives (A). It has been compared with a contemporary transcript (B), which has corrections in the handwriting both of Mr. Twyne and of Dr. Langbaine.¹ The inventory was made between January and October 1631. The date of the transcript is given as 11 April 1635; but Mr. Twyne left a space at the end of his entries concerning each pyxis, and sometimes inserted additional documents down to about 1636. The documents here described were placed in drawers bearing the same designations in the West Press of the Archives; and the Long Boxes were arranged in racks above the Press by Dr. Bliss in 1827. The alterations which have been made since the muniments were catalogued by Mr. Twyne are noted in italics from a copy of Dr. Wallis's Repertory (As), in which all subsequent changes have been entered. The references to Hare's collections were added afterwards by Mr. Twyne and are printed in italics. Besides the pagination given below the inventory bears also a separate pagination from 1-55, to which reference is occasionally made in the text. Laborious as Mr. Twyne was, he was a somewhat negligent penman, and it has not been thought necessary in printing his inventory to preserve his exact punctuation or use of capital letters; nor have his references to other parts of his Collectanea been included. For almost the whole of the transcript I am indebted to my son Austin L. Poole, B.A., a member of Mr. Twyne's College.

is inserted as follows: 'The eighth day of June A: D: 1641 Received then from Mr. Roger Jones Registrer of the Court of the Chancellor of the Unversitie of Oxford by the hands of John Nourse gent. one Register booke of the yeares 1628. 1629. 1630. 1631. 1632. 1633. by mee Ro: Harley.' The volume was apparently not returned. It is not included in the list of records handed over by the executors of Roger Jones to Barnaby Love, the new Registrar, in 1644.
